FR 204 Introduction to French and Francophone Studies
Instructor: Ms. Dezirae Shukla
MWF 10:00-10:50
This course engages students in a reflection on what it means to “do French Studies” in an American university and acquaints them with the kinds of activities they will see in more advanced courses. Through careful analysis of a variety of literary texts, students will consider the problems – and intellectual potential – involved in studying a field that is by definition interdisciplinary.

FR 215 Visual Cultures
Instructor: Ms. Dezirae Shukla
MWF 11:00-11:50
In this course, students examine visual media from Francophone cultures while creating interdisciplinary connections with other visual forms of representation. Through analytic exercises of photos, video, art, textiles, drawings, comics, etc., students learn to describe and express the relationship between visual “texts” and the culture from which they come.

FR 307 Introduction to the French Business World
Instructor: Dr. Sadia Zoubir-Shaw
TR 12:30-1:45
The objective of this course is to gain technical as well as cultural understanding of business procedures in France. The course will provide an overview of the social, historical, and economic background of France as a nation, France’s contribution to, and position within, the European Union, and France’s role as an international partner in the business world. The course will also address various aspects of intercultural communication and cultural differences, which often result in culture-specific business practices and behaviors. Particular attention will be devoted to concrete information and practice relating to more functional aspects of the business world such as the structure of French businesses, contract and professional letter writing, banking, insurance, etc., pertinent to successful business in and with France.

FR 311 Introduction to Linguistics
Instructor: Dr. Sadia Zoubir-Shaw
TR 9:30-10:45
This course is an introduction to the scientific and historical study of a variety of languages of the world; as such it will introduce students to various aspects to levels, and components of human language (phonetics, phonology, morphology, semantics, and syntax) as it developed over time. During the course of the semester, students will learn to (1) re-evaluate beliefs concerning language and languages, (2) be introduced to the study of language structure, and the evidence for that structure, and (3) will develop analytical skills by applying established techniques to data drawn from languages spoken in all parts of the world.

FR 324 Studies in French Literature
Instructor: Dr. Suzanne Pucci
TR 11:00-12:15
We will explore texts such as La Chanson de Roland, the Lais of Marie de France, and poetry of writers such as Ronsard, Du Bellay, and Baudelaire to examine modes of intimacy and war that characterize the French poetic tradition and that help us understand the codes and beliefs of such basic social and cultural practices and conventions.

FR 344: The Literary Text Twentieth-Century Poetry
Instructor: Ms. Jeorg Ellen Sauer
MWF 10:00-10:50
In this course, we will read and examine politically-engaged, avant-garde, and surrealist movements from the early to late twentieth century. From the traditional style of Anna de Noailles to Tristan Tzara’s surrealism, from the love poetry of Paul Éluard to the provocative poetry of Raymond Queneau, we will discuss how poetry transformed thought in art and culture.

FR 425 Media Studies
Instructor: Dr. Jeffrey Peters
MWF 2:00-2:50
This course examines how the media serve as forms of representation that lie between – in the middle of (“media” come from the Latin medius, “in the middle”) – the world and our ideas about the world. We will ask: how do media structure our understanding? Why do media typically mean mass media (TV, film, newspapers, etc.)? How is language study itself a kind of medium? How is language study also the study of media? Where does the modern concept of media come from?

FR 471G: Topical Seminar II The Letter Novel
Instructor: Dr. Suzanne Pucci
How and why did letters become so important as to form the basis of the French eighteenth-century novel? Many have highlighted the virtues of this kind of novel which can convey emotions and thoughts of characters, of the letter writer, directly and transparently, better than any other narrative. Is this always true? We will examine this first-person form of writing in novels such as the Lettres portugaises, Lettres persanes, Lettres d’une Péruvienne, Les Liaisons dangereuses. As a social mode of communication, as a literary form, what does this kind of writing tell us about fiction, about writing, about society?

FR 609 Seventeenth-Century Studies: La comédie humaine de La Fontaine
Instructor: Dr. Jeffrey Peters
M 3:30-6:00
In “Le bûcheron et Mercure,” Jean de La Fontaine describes the fable genre as “Une ample Comédie à cent actes divers,/ Et dont la scène est l’Univers.” In this class, we will ask what La Fontaine means by this. We will read seventeenth-century literary practice and philosophical reflection through the lens of La Fontaine’s Fables and his theater metaphor, and consider the theoretical questions they raise. These will include: the nature of the poetic, problems of cosmic scale and its relation to the human situation, La Fontaine’s argument with Descartes over knowledge and the soul (and therefore the debate between Epicureans and rationalists), concepts of artistic originality and agency, the origins of disciplinarity, and the problem of the pictorial in verbal texts.

FR 621 Twentieth-Century Studies: Literary Experiments
Instructor: Dr. Leon Sachs
R: 3:30-6:00
Playing on the double meaning of the French word “expérience”, this course acquaints students with some of most famous literary “experiments” and “experiences” in twentieth-century French literary and intellectual culture. Students will read representative works of the surrealist movement, existentialism, the nouveau roman, and absurd theater as well as other works noted for their creative innovations. Students will also study important theoretical texts that have made a lasting impact on the way we understand literature today. Representative authors will include Aragon, Beckett, Breton, Camus, Céline, Césaire, Colette, Robbe-Grillet, Proust, Sarraute, Duras, and Barthes.
